GEW 101: Principles of Written Communication
June 24, 2019

In Democracy and Other Neoliberal Fantasies, Jodi Dean (2009) argues that "imagining a rhizome might be nice, but rhizomes don't describe the underlying structure of real networks" (30), rejecting the idea that there is such a thing as a nonhierarchical interconnectedness that structures our contemporary world and means of communication. Michael Hardt and Antonio Negri (2009), on the other hand, argue that the Internet is an exemplar of the rhizome: a nonhierarchical, noncentered network—a democratic network with "an indeterminate and potentially unlimited number of interconnected nodes [that] communicate with no central point of control" (299). What is at stake in settling this dispute. Later, modernists began to acknowledge the fragmentation, ambiguity and larger chaos that characterized modern life (Harvey 1990, 22).

- The Author-Date citation system is primarily used by those in the physical, natural, and social sciences. Instead of using notes, sources are cited directly in the text, in parentheses. A full citation for the source will also be included in a references page.
- Each time you use a source in the text, cite the source in parenthesis. Parenthetical citations are comprised of author's name (or names), publication date, and page numbers, if applicable. Place a comma between the year and page numbers. However, DO NOT use punctuation between the author's last name and the publication date. In-text citations are placed at the end of a sentence BEFORE punctuation.
- Specific Cases:
  - If a source has no author, use up to four key words from the article title.
  - If there is no page number, use Section (sec.), equation (eq), Volume (vol.), or Note (n.).
  - Use a semicolon to separate two or more references in a single parenthetical citation when used in the same sentence. The order they are cited should reflect the order in which they appear in the sentence.
